Abandonment of the sTRX4 platform [edit | edit source]

Main article: link to the main article

On November 25, 2019, AMD released the sTRX4 ↗ socket alongside their Threadripper 3000 ↗ series of HEDT (high-end desktop) processors with the promise of long term support for the platform.[1][2] This along with the strong reputation of socket AM4 ↗ led many people to invest into the platform. Despite the promises made, AMD ultimately fell flat and only supported a total of one generation of CPUs before freezing the regular Ryzen Threadripper lineup till the release of Threadripper 7000 ↗ on socket sTR5 ↗.

Products [edit | edit source]

CPUs: [edit | edit source]

- Epyc ↗ (server lineup)
- Ryzen ↗ (desktop lineup)
- Ryzen Threadripper ↗ (HEDT lineup)

GPUs: [edit | edit source]

- Radeon ↗ (consumer lineup)
- Radeon Pro ↗ (workstation lineup)
- Radeon Instinct ↗ (ML targeted workstation lineup)
